Associate Clinical or Clinical Professor of Law

The Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law at Arizona State University, the oldest law school in the nation's sixth largest city, invites applications for a position on its clinical law faculty as the Director of the Innovation Advancement Program (IAP). The IAP is an interdisciplinary clinic devoted to a wide array of legal and business planning services for inventors, technology entrepreneurs, tech transfer professionals, and emerging technology companies. The Director will be expected to lead all aspects of the IAP's operations including: educating students in both classroom and live client formats, identifying and choosing clients, recruiting students, curriculum development, relationship building within the university, relationship building with the Arizona entrepreneurial ecosystem, and fund raising activities. The selected candidate will also be expected to fulfill the duties of a faculty member of the Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law. More information about the IAP is available at www.law.asu.edu/iap.

Minimum qualifications for the position include a JD degree, 3 years of experience either running a similar law school clinic or substantive experience providing legal counseling to entrepreneurs and early stage startup companies. Preferred candidates will have demonstrated experience as a leader in the field or the potential to become a leading figure in the field, an interest in the business side of entrepreneurship and startups (not just the legal issues they face), and an ability to foster relationships with faculty and departments across the university, and an interest in building relationships in the Arizona entrepreneurial community.

The application deadline for the position is November 15, 2013; if not filled, the 1st of the month thereafter until the position is filled or the search is closed. To apply, please submit a CV and references to Ms. Gina Wilson, Appointments Committee Coordinator, Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law, Arizona State University, 1100 S.
